

Cervical cancer can be avoided by early detection, or with a HPV vaccine.

There are plenty of reasons we have avoided going to gynecologists, but we have to take care of ourselves and each other!

Cervical cancer is a queer issue.

In one study, trans people with cervixes were 60% less likely to get cervical cancer screenings than cis women.*

A queer-friendly healthcare provider can make all the difference.

Talk to your primary care provider about cervical cancer screening and the HPV vaccine. You can find a list of LGBTQ-welcoming screening providers in your area by visiting our website: www.cancer-network.org/providerdatabases/.

*Source: https://www.eurekalert.org/pub_releases/2019-01/smh-pwi012319.php

Stony Brook
Medicine

national lgbt cancer network
ADVOCATING FOR HEALTH EQUALITY

